Challenging ideas – Changing policy

Supporting Families

Have we got what it takes?

Thursday 10 December 2009
Royal Society of Arts, 8 John Adam St,
London WC2N 6EZ

At this major one-day conference ippr will bring together stakeholders from a range of sectors involved in supporting parents and families. The day will focus on the future direction of policy and highlight some of the latest examples of innovative whole-family support.

Family support is increasingly being seen as a solution to tackling family breakdown and fragmented family networks. Parenting and whole-family interventions to tackle problems from anti-social behaviour to youth offending have increased in number over the last decade and there is now more emphasis on the role of government in responding to the wider needs of families.

But what should the future be for this growing policy area and, with a General Election due, what are the ambitions of the two main political parties to strengthen families? What will the priorities be in a tighter funding climate and how should local authorities and service providers respond? The conference will address these questions and more.

Speakers include:

The Rt Hon Dawn Primarolo MP,
Minister of State for Children, Schools and Families (invited)

David Willetts MP, Shadow Minister for Universities and Skills

Graham Allen MP
Simon Antrobus, Addaction

Dr Tanya Byron, Clinical Psychologist (invited)

Cllr Brian Connell, Westminster City Council

Supporting Families | Why should you attend?

- Find out how a changed funding climate is likely to affect the future of family and parenting support in the UK
- Hear analysis of the Government's early intervention consultation and discussion on the Families Green Paper to be published later this year
- Listen to the latest Conservative Party thinking on family policy and policy proposals for change
- Hear the most recent evidence on effective parenting and family support
- Discuss how we can work towards a better balance between fire-fighting and prevention in our public services for families
- Debate whether the right local strategic groupings are in place to deliver effective family support
- Learn how to create more accountable collaborations between frontline professionals
- Find out about innovative whole-family interventions for families with multiple problems
- Question leading figures on how improved planning and commissioning can provide a more sustainable future for third sector initiatives to ensure life beyond pilots
- Track the changing focus in parenting and family support away from anti-social behaviour towards tackling child poverty, mental health and substance misuse
- Network with colleagues from different aspects of the debate to share good practice and influence policy developments.
